Canada's Opportunities

Provided the people of this country, and of all sections of it, are ready and willing to pull together with the single objective in view of making the most of the opportunities that are being afforded, Canada's future destiny as one of the most powerful and influential nations of the world appears assured.

That the future holds out glittering prospects of great potentialities for this Dominion there can be no doubt if the foundations which are now being laid are built on the solid rock of true democratic principles and if the people of this young nation bind themselves together in unified effort to seize upon the opportunities that lie on the threshold.

The testimony of men of experience, vision and vision that Canada is destined for a great role among the nations is being multiplied daily. This country has all the ingredients of powerful nationhood—an immense area replete with tremendous resources, a comparatively small but virile population, an invigorating and healthful climate, vast spaces capable of enormous development and now, the opportunity for stretching out and developing these great assets. All that is needed is a populace prepared to look ahead and assume the place in the world that it merely awaits the grasping.

As the octogenarian Sir Alfred Morris, former acting prime minister of Newfoundland recently said, urging union of Newfoundland with this country: "Obviously Canada is the greatest power of the British Empire in the not distant future. We have the greatest country in the world. All that we now want is the greatest people in character and in courage."

Stating that after the war the world will be initially an Anglo-Saxon dominated world, Frederick T. Burchall, Ottawa correspondent of the New York Times, recently visualized a great role for this country in a world purged of Hitlerism. Declaring that this country has already become the geographical centre of the British Empire, Mr. Burchall saw prospects of Canada becoming the world's air centre through the British Commonwealth Air Training scheme.

"It may be Canada's highest mission," said Mr. Burchall, "to bring us all together—the democracies of the old world and the democracies of the new, to be the keystone of Anglo-Saxon unity and the great arch of peace and progress, topped by the ancient culture of France."

A brilliant vision and by no means an impractical one. Indeed, our feet are already planted on the broadest of ground, and we are on our way to the New York newspaperman. It remains for us to see that the road traversed without deviation until the objective is reached. It cannot be achieved, however, until the war has been won. Hence the importance of bending every energy to the first task immediately at hand, that of defeating the enemy thoroughly and speedily. The sooner that milestone has been passed, the earlier will Canada, the British Empire and the other democracies be able to get down to the ambitious program of peace, progress and prosperity—security for themselves and security for others.

And what of the war itself? Despite those who were disposed to be impatient and critical because of any apparent delay on the part of either of the belligerents, British authorities were well satisfied that progress was made in the first six months of hostilities. As Sir John Simon, chancellor of the exchequer of Great Britain well summarized it: "It has been of great advantage to us to have these six months in which we have been able so vastly to improve our preparation and equipment. Whatever use Germany may have made of the six months, on balance, it is the Allies who have gained."

Must Remain Firm

And as Prime Minister Chamberlain appropriately put it, Hitler has "missed the bus" in not taking the offensive before the Allied armies were able to complete their preparations to meet any big push which the fuhrer might, have launched but didn't.

Having "missed the bus," Hitler and his colleagues appear to be living in a fool's paradise, fondly hoping that they may be extricated from their dilemma by a negotiated peace—an eventuality which is beyond all possibility. If the Allied leaders make the stand which they have stoutly held since the outbreak of hostilities, there is no reason to believe there will be any weakening of the position that Nazism must be rendered impotent before the Allies will lay down their arms. Indeed, any other decision would be an invitation for a repetition elsewhere of the rape of Czechoslovakia and Poland.

Until the routing and uprooting of Nazism has been consummated, therefore, the people of this country must be content to continue their participation in the war with patience, determination and indomitability and, in the meantime, take advantage of opportunities which will arise from time to time to prepare the foundations for the magnificent national structure which may and will be erected once peace has been restored.

Proved His Ability

Young Deekhand Captained Lifesboat For Week After Freighter Sank

Executive ability and a notable feat of seamanship displayed by an 18-year-old deckboy after his ship had been torpedoed and sunk in the Atlantic attracted the attention of the British Admiralty, who has invited him to call for an interview.

The boy, named Morrison, member of a family of fishers on the Hebrides Island of Lewis, was in a water-logged lifeboat with five other survivors of the lifeboat sinking. After a week of hardship, Morrison, 18, was rescued by a British ship. He found that he was the only one among them who knew how to handle a sail, or anything about navigation, so he calmly took charge.

With a small compass he set a course, and for a week never left the tiller except to take a turn at the oars to warm himself, although his hands were badly frosted.

There were plenty of biscuits, condensed milk and some bully beef in the locker, but very little water, so Morrison rationed this, allowing only one spoonful at a time except in the case of a 65-year-old man, to whom he gave a drink whenever he needed it.

The boat on the seventh day was sighted by a Norwegian tanker which took the castaways aboard.

Another Economy Measure

German Housewives Use Shopping Basket To Save Wrapping Paper

German housewives have brought out the old-fashioned shopping baskets to help win the war.

An almost forgotten relic in most German households, the shopping basket has now become a treasure auxiliary to the Hausfrau because grocers and butchers are unable to deliver goods to the home and more important—because it saves wrapping paper and paper bags.

The basket enjoys the benediction of authorities who publicly have told German women to use it in shopping. It is so useful that potatoes, for instance, can be dumped right into the basket, as can other vegetables, canned goods, standardized soap and other such commodities. Some stores have taken the hint of the Government and are now displaying signs asking shoppers to bring their old baskets with them.

This is one of many German wartime economy measures. Another is bone-collecting, which has become a high patriotic duty.

The official German news agency, D.N.R., has circulated the admonition: "Housewives, don't burn any bones and don't throw them into the garbage can." Bones should be put aside, even when they have been used for soup, and kept in readiness for school children, the Hitler Youth and other voluntary bone collectors, the authorities say.

Bones thus collected can be put to three uses: For the manufacture of manure, for industrial fats and for fertilizers.

The fats contained in bones, it is said, is valuable to soap and cosmetics manufacturers besides being usable in other branches of industry.

Experts estimate that three-fourths of the bones in Germany go to waste. That condition, it is insisted, must cease.

Cheers Were Silenced

When Widow Of Exeter's Commander Received Medal From King George

A woman divided in black hushed the cheering which swept the British Empire recently when the King and his people honored the officers and men of the cruiser Exeter and Ajax for their bravery in the victory of the Great Spee. It was on the historic force's Grand parade ground. The King had just inspected the 700 officers and men of the two cruisers. In one corner, watching the inspection, was a small group of civilians, the next-of-kin of those who had been killed in the battle. Then from the ranks of the cheering crowd came a woman who had been a great asset to the cause. She was the widow of the late Commander of the Exeter, who died of his wounds was conducted to the investiture table to receive the medal for his gallantry from the King. Marine Russell had been shot and shattered in the battle, but he had been hit from an 11-inch shell, but he remained on deck to cheer his shipmates throughout the battle. The crowd was so moved by his heroism that they stood until this moment. But this pale woman in black seemed to symbolize the national sentiment for the grief epitomized by the Cenotaph, many yards away. The cheers died away and there was silence, as on another Remembrance Day. The King shook hands with Mrs. Russell. The Queen smiled her sympathy.

Loyalty Of South Africa

Prime Minister Jan Smuts Stands By Ideals Of British Freedom

Prime Minister Jan Smuts said that he advocated South Africa's joining in the Empire's war against Germany because "Great Britain is our greatest friend and... Germany would be a dangerous benefactor."

"Many people in the Union are constantly recalling the past. I remember that it was Great Britain which made South Africa a free country and which has given liberty to the native peoples."

Since Sept. 4 there has been a surge of feeling in favor of South Africa's decision to enter the war. It has been a great consolation for me to find this response from all over the Union. Support for the United party is winning because the party's cause is a winning one."

THE WORLD OF WHEAT

Occasionally, in times of war, it is a good thing for the human mind to dwell on pleasant and nobler things.

Great men in the past, who have had to shoulder grave responsibility, have ever found succor from their anxious toil in seeking contact with the soil in growing of flowers and, if they were lucky, in farming itself.

That great American, George Washington, on December 4th, 1788 wrote the following letter of encouragement to the Philadelphia Society for promoting agriculture, of which he was a member:

"The more I am acquainted with agricultural affairs, the better I am pleased with them; inasmuch, that I can no where find so great satisfaction as in those innocent and useful pursuits. In indulging these feelings, I am led to reflect how much more delightful a unobscured mind is the task of making improvements on the earth, than all the vain glory which can be acquired from ravaging it by the most uninterrupted career."

I conquests. The design of this observation, is only to show how much, as a member of human society, I feel myself obliged, by your labors to order respectable and advantageous employment which is more congenial to the natural disposition of mankind than any other."

A short time ago this column referred to an uncommonly good book written by Mme. Tabouis, on the life of Nebuchadnezzar, the King of Babylon, who reigned some 600 years B.C.

Nebuchadnezzar, Mme. Tabouis tells us, became a great world conqueror. He subdued the Kingdom of Assyria, Babel, the Medes, Jerusalem of the Jews, and a number of others including Mesopotamia; and then he obtained control of the lands which opened up into the Mediterranean. Nebuchadnezzar, however, held one important principle in mind in all these great conquests, which was that of the modern world-builder, I would seem, might well meditate upon.

Nebuchadnezzar realized that the only way to dominate over other lands and over other people could be transferred into wealth and satisfaction for his own people, was, as he said, by the normal working of economic affairs and not by military supremacy alone, and to bring about this desired result Nebuchadnezzar energetically set himself to work to encourage trade and commerce between the different countries.

THERE'S SOMETHING IN THE ENGLISH AFTER ALL

This tribute to British valor, by an American poet, Bertrand Russell, was written some years ago, but it comes now with telling timeliness:

I've been meditating lately that
When everything is told,
There's something in the English after all;
They may be too bent on conquest,
And too eager for gold,
But there's something in the English after all.
Though their sins and faults are many,
And I won't exhaust my breath,
By endeavoring to tell you of them all,
Yet they have a sense of duty,
And they'll face it to the death,
So there's something in the English after all.

If you're wounded by a savage foe,
And he's laughing and retreating,
There's something in the English after all;
You may bet your life they'll carry you,
Beyond the zone of fire,
For there's something in the English after all.
Yes, although their guns be empty,
And their blood be ebbling fast,
And to stay by wounded comrades to be fall,
Yet they'll set their teeth like bull-dogs,
And protect you to the last,
Or they'll die like English soldiers after all.

When the seas demand their tribute,
And a British ship goes down,
There's something in the English after all;
There's no panic rush for safety,
Where the weak are left to drown,
For there's something in the English after all,
But the women upon the beach,
Are the first to leave the wreck,
With the crew in hand as steady as a wall,
And the captain is the last to stand
Upon the sinking deck,
So there's something in the English after all.

Though half of Europe hates them,
And would joy in their decline,
Yet there's something in the English after all,
They may scorn the scanty numbers
Of this red British line,
Yet they fear insubordination after all,
For they know that in the end
To the drummer in the band,
There is not a single soldier in them all,
But would go to blind destruction,
Were their country to be denied,
And call it simple duty, after all.
